I believe standard graduate programs are better than short certification courses even though both have advantages. As Tom wrote, these programs often have better instructors, but they also provide full in-depth knowledge on the field of study. With this depth of knowledge, which is often not provided in short certification courses, students can better succeed in their careers.

I believe standard graduate programs are better than short certification courses although both provide great advantages. I totally agree with Tom's point that these programs often prepare the students better and I would like to add that students will become better candidates when looking for jobs and professional opportunities. Those programs offer depth lines of study including speech and writing development, which is very valuable for strengthening people skills when presenting an interview. That's why I think standard graduate programs are better.

I believe that standard courses are better than short certification courses even though both have advantages. As tome wrote, these programs often have better instructions but they also provide students with an. amazing and important experiences beyond the degree itself. Personaly! get improvement with the graduate program in different skills as compare to the short it courses. I remembering when I got graduation in my field then I recognized my weakness, I faced during the short it courses, When I start lecturing the 12" grade students then I realized the importance of graduation program study because I got perfect how to speak in public and how to deliver the subject lecture, I got first position in subject competition where I badly failed during the short it courses competition that why I prefer standard courses as compare to the short certification courses.

I believe that short certification courses are better tham standard regular programs. As kelly wrote, short certification courses allow students to put in practice the materials learned. Also, these courses save students time. When students are taking short certification programs, they are completing their materials in just few months, which will allow them to use this time saved to start working as soon as possible. For example, I enrolled my self in the pharmacy teechnician courses, which are being completed in only six months. When I finished them, I was able to work in a retail pharmacy and was able to build my experience sooner, which is not the case when someone is taking a traditional program like my friend. When we both applied for a job in a pharmaceutical company, they chose experience, which I was able to build in the years that I saved over, over programs. This is why I prefer to take short certification courses over traditional school graduation.
